mately three percent of the population. Most kidney stone patients are men between ages 18 and 50. Stones also are more prevalent in certain areas of the country, including Virginia and North Carolina, urologists say, but the reasons for the existence of a "stone belt" are unclear.

The kidney stone lithotripter, a $1.7 million research tool, is housed in a 5,600-square-foot addition to the urology clinic along Hospital Drive. The facility includes an anesthesia induction room, x-ray room, cysto scopic rooms, lithotripter treatment room, water treatment room, recovery room, nurses' station and a conference room.

In 1982, the Dornier Company of Friedrichshafen, West Germany, developed the kidney stone lithotripter. More than 4,000 patients have been successfully treated without significant complications.

Urologists in the University's School of Medicine will evaluate the safety and efficacy of the lithotripter for the Food and Drug Administration. The FDA-sponsored clinical tests are required before the machine can be made available for general public use.
